OUR CAMPAIGN AGAINST CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

By Rabbi Ferdinand M. Isserman

We are marking time in our campaign against corporal punishment in the public schools of Toronto, while waiting the special meeting of the Management Committee at which the subject will be discussed. The entire board is to attend that meeting and the heads of the public schools, high schools and technical schools will present their reports on the status of corporal punishment in their schools. We shall await with interest that meeting. Meanwhile, we hope to organize a corps of educationists who will be ready to go out and speak on the subject and thus help educate the public on the evils of using the strap either to impart knowledge or to inculcate morality.

HART HOUSE AND ACADEMIC FREEDOM

Hart House, the student recreational centre of the University of Toronto, recently staged a debate on Communism and invited one of Toronto's leading Communists to defend his economic theories. The announcement of the debate caused a flurry among some peanut-heads, who saw the University's students becoming corrupted by unholy doctrines. But to the officials of the university who ignored the protests, and to the head of Hart House who insisted that all views sincerely held should be presented to the students, we want to express our appreciation. Their action was essential to academic freedom. The student dedicated to truth seeks it everywhere. The true student should analyze Communism and see its defects and advantages. The university authorities should stimulate free and open discussion of all vital problems. That is the function of a university. And when Hart House provides a forum for the free play of ideas, it is serving the highest interests of learning.

THE EXCHANGE OF PULPITS

Next Sunday morning Rev. E. Crossley Hunter of the Carlton Street United Church will occupy the pulpit of the Holy Blossom Synagogue, and on that same day I shall return the visit and occupy the pulpit of the Carlton Street United Church at its evening services. I am not a stranger in that church. I delivered the sermon at one of its Sunday evening services last year, when 1,900 people crowded into a church built to accommodate 1,400. Nor is the Rev. Hunter a stranger at Holy Blossom. He has addressed both the Sisterhood and Men's Club at their meetings. The Rev. Hunter is one of an ever-increasing group of Christian ministers, who are determined that the religion of Jesus shall not be obscured by the religion about Jesus. Whatever their own particular theology may be, they are resolute in their view that to be a Christian one must attempt to live the ideals of Jesus. For them professing a creed about Jesus is inadequate. They have become impatient with a formal religion which has spent its energies in theological speculation and which thereby lost the spiritual beauty of its prophet and founder. They are clamouring that Christians live the life of humility and love. And the hope of all men and women not of the Christian faith is that these ministers triumph.

IS ZIONISM DOOMED?

The London Daily Express, long noted for its anti-Zionist tendencies, has recently raised its voice again, in alarmist tones, pronouncing the doom of the Zionist experiment in Palestine. It professes to know that American Jews are not sending any more funds to Palestine, and concludes that the economic crisis will result in the collapse of the entire project.

There is no denying that the situation in Palestine is critical. The economic depression, which has lasted for some time, is sapping the strength of the none too robust settlement. It is also true that in a large measure the sentiment for Zionism has been allowed to cool off in America with the inevitable reaction on the revenue.

But these circumstances do not warrant a "defeatist" frame of mind. The Jewish people are not yet ready to declare themselves bankrupt. Their determination and perseverance have not been taxed to the limit.

The experiment of rebuilding Palestine for the Jewish people is, as may readily be conceived, a very difficult one. It is an undertaking without precedent in recent history. The present generation of Jews has gone through an extremely harrowing ordeal during the war period. It has been exposed to so many physical and spiritual shocks on every front that its health was of necessity impaired.

When the opportunity for restoring Palestine thrust itself upon Jewdom it was an impoverished and weakened people that was available for the task.

Moreover, the Jewish people found themselves deficient in the knowledge of the technique of land building, and wanting in the machinery requisite for the undertaking.

Palestine was opened for the Jews; here was a new situation. The Zionist organization was the only instrument on hand to deal with it. But it was not equipped to appreciate the economics of the venture, and to evolve a sound procedure. What was the result? The work was rushed into without any definite economic plan. A prospectus or "set-up" of the scheme was offered to the public that was not based on safe economic principles. At the outset emotional exuberance was allowed to determine the range of the hopes and ambitions. The proposition was envisaged as one of building up a Jewish homeland in a space of some ten years—no more and no less. Incendiary orators kindled hopes of this sort in the hearts of the masses. The realities of the situation in the early stages, of course, gave no warrant for such extravagant notions, but they were not heeded.

Then came the period of the open door in Palestine and the surge of immigration from Poland. Over thirty thousand immigrants entered the country in one year. A spell of artificial prosperity followed. Again rosy-hued pictures of the ambitions and achievements were painted. The perspective of the goal was thrown out of focus, and the routes were charted along distorted lines. Zionism cheered itself with the delusion that the accomplishment of the task could be achieved in one hectic decade instead of

Rabbi Stern Presents a Jewish View of Jesus

"Humanity is larger than Jew or Christian," said Rabbi Harry J. Stern, of Temple Emmanu-El, Montreal, speaking at the Central Y.M.C.A. Forum. "We are all children of one Father, God. The ideal is not one of uniformity but of spiritual unity, a great symphony with each instrument striking out for the ultimate harmony, the Kingdom of God upon earth." Rabbi Stern thought it significant of a better understanding of each other that he, a Jewish Rabbi, should be invited to address an audience at a Young Men's Christian Association Forum, upon a subject like "A Jewish View of Jesus."

In reply to a question during the discussion that followed the address, the speaker expressed reverence for Jesus, the man and moral teacher. In his opinion, Jesus, who was the Son of God, just as every other person is a son of God, was a great prophet, and a moral and ethical leader. Jesus, he thought, was original in giving a spiritual emphasis to life. "Jesus has been an inspiration to millions of people," he said, "and I would not detract one iota of respect from him. I only ask that you, as Christians, be followers of Jesus of Nazareth, the Jew."

Introduced by the chairman, Col. G. W. Birks, as a "brother searcher in that eternal quest," Rabbi Stern asked the audience to try not to misunderstand him as it was a most delicate subject with which he had to deal. He emphasized the fact that there was no official Jewish view of Jesus, just as there was no official Jewish view of Buddha or the leaders of any other religion. "I respect all the great personalities who have led people to a vital faith, whether it be Zoroaster, Mohammed, Buddha, or whether it be Jesus of Nazareth.

The speaker first outlined briefly the essential factors of Judaism. The first of these was a belief in one spiritual being, God, incorporeal, who cannot be incarnated in any one person, and whom no one person could represent to the human race. The second was a great ideal, the moral law of God to govern human conduct in justice, peace and harmony one with the other. The Jews had never worshipped a personality, but the moral law above the personality. The third factor of Judaism was a great hope, the hope of the Kingdom of God upon earth. Judaism was not so much concerned about the next world.

"How does Jesus fit into this outline of the Jewish religion?" Rabbi Stern asked. Historically he, as a Jew, had no doubt that Jesus, the Nazarene, had actually lived, although there were some Christians who doubted this fact. He believed that the historical Jesus was a humble teacher who preached and ministered to his countrymen, lived among them, studied with their rabbis and attended their worship. The Jesus of history never broke with the religion of his fathers, and, said the speaker, "I am proud that he was of my people, Israel." As to the legendary Jesus, the Jesus of the miracles, the same sort of marvels had been attributed to all the other great prophets before and after him. The Jesus of theology, Rabbi Stern believed, was not the Jesus of history, but a creation of Paul and later leaders of the church. The immaculate conception, transubstantiation, and similar other beliefs and ceremonies of the modern church were part of the legendary Jesus and things of which the historical Jesus had known nothing. The present conflict in the church between fundamentalists and modernists was but a return to the deals of the historical Jesus, to Christianity, not churchianity. Jesus was not the Messiah prophesied by the Old Testament.

"The Christian Church has been very cruel to the Jews since that dark day of Golgotha," so cruel that he was ashamed of Christianity when he thought of it. If the Jews did kill Jesus—did not mankind always crucify its prophets, and immortalize them afterwards? Did not also the Athenians kill Socrates, the Italians kill Savonarola? Yet were they persecuted as the Jews had been throughout history?" And, if as was the theological view, it was God's will that Jesus be crucified, why blame the Jews? Could not the Christians remember Jesus' own words, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Christianity owed a great debt to Judaism, not only for Christ himself, but for the Bible. He protested against the naiveness of some Christian sects in sending missionaries to the Jew, the race which had given Jesus himself to the world. Rabbi Stern closed his address with an appeal to his hearers to try to understand the Jewish point of view, to work for a common understanding, for by a spiritual unity only would ever come the long awaited Messianic age, the Kingdom of God upon earth.

Emil Ludwig in America

Distinguished Biographer to Visit Various Cities on Lecture Tour

(By Special arrangement with "The American Hebrew." Copyright. Reprint Rights Reserved.)

Dr. Emil Ludwig, author of "Bismarck," "William Hohenzollern," "Napoleon" and whose newest book, "Jesus," is announced, is the latest of the celebrated literary men from abroad who have recently visited or are about to visit America. Wassermann, Guedalla and Maurois were recently here; Louis Golding is now our guest; Molnar is about to bid us adieu; Feuchtwanger, author of "Power," is soon to come; likewise, G. B. Stern, author of "The Matriarch" and other novels. Emil Ludwig is making a transcontinental lecture tour beginning with a talk on "Bismarck and the German Republic" in English.

In "Bismarck, the Story of a Fighter" Emil Ludwig approaches this ferocious old gentleman in the spirit of a scholar. Ludwig is neither a patriot nor a fanatic and this monumental work takes no sides, but gives us what the reader can hardly avoid believing is a true picture of the Iron Chancellor with his cholors, his grouches, his genius and his frightful cigars.

For eighty years, partisan opinion has flashed its lightning around the figure of Bismarck. Herr Ludwig, whose brilliant "Napoleon" was so widely acclaimed, has made another remarkable contribution to the penetrating history of great men in revealing the true inwardness of the Iron Chancellor.

Of particular moment are those passages in which the German historian refers to Bismarck's handling of the Jewish question at that day. Thus, he says:

"When the Jewish question comes up for discussion, Bismarck would like to absent himself, for in this matter he is not at one with the government. Ultimately, however, he puts in an appearance; and, since he has already become, in a sense, one of the leaders of the extreme right, he takes up his parable against the 'tedious humanitarian twaddle' of the left, which is striving to secure equality for all the king's subjects.

"'I am no enemy of the Jews,' he declares arrogantly; 'and if they are hostile to me I forgive them. I love them under every circumstance. For my part, I would grant them all rights, save only the right of holding the chief offices in a Christian State. . . .'"

In another passage Ludwig says: "The only people to whose conversation Bismarck refers with pleasure in these days are Jews. He speaks of Lassalle as one of the most brilliant of men, as one from whom he is loath to part even when they have been talking far on into the night. Bleichröder, whom he employs as confidential agent, always has the entry; receives a power of attorney for the administration of Bismarck's property, and, at the premier's instigation, is raised into the ranks of the hereditary nobility. For years a certain Doctor Cohen acts as both friend and physician, the relationship continuing until Cohen's death. Thus Bismarck entrusts both his health and his property to Jews."

Toward the closing of his masterful biography, the youthful German historian writes as follows:

"At a later date, the Iron Chancellor was full of praise for Disraeli. We cannot but ask why it was that he should make so much of Bleichröder instead of Hansemann; of Cohen instead of Fredericks; of Lassalle instead of Liebknecht; of Simson instead of Richter; of Disraeli instead of Salisbury.

"By this date, Bismarck had long since discarded anti-Semitism, together with the other reactionary prejudices of his youth. Even in the strictest privacy, he never appears to have given vent to any more expressions of antagonism to the Jews, although we can hardly doubt that — reason notwithstanding — the traditional prejudices of his class in this matter must have, to some extent, persisted to the last. Twenty years after his speech against the admission of Jews to positions in the State service, it was he who carried through a law for the emancipation of the Jews, insisting that since Prussia had no State religion, the government could not take sides in such matters."

"In old age, he summarized the social and biological value of the Jews in the following epigram: 'The mingling of Jewish blood with the various German stocks introduces a certain sparkle whose value must not be underestimated.'" is one of the new school of younger historians who portray great figures without false glamour. He believes it is just as important to tell that Bismarck could consume 150 oysters at a sitting and drain a whole bottle of wine at a draught, as to discourse on diplomacy. Dr. Ludwig reached our shores lately.

Americans approaching three-score-and-ten may recall the Lasker episode. In 1873, largely as a result of the Franco-Prussian War, there was an inflation in Germany and Edouard Lasker warned of a coming crash. The financial panic came in 1879 and Lasker and the Jews became unpopular as a result; a scapegoat was needed, and official anti-Semitism which, it is said Bismarck condoned or fomented, began. He desired to make political capital of it.

Morris Lasker, a brother of the famous German socialist, Edouard Lasker, resided in Galveston. (Incidentally, Albert D. Lasker, of Chicago, is a surviving son of the former). Herr Edouard Lasker was visiting his brother in America in 1886 when this distinguished foreign statesman died. Thomas P. Ochiltree, a representative in Congress from Texas, offered a resolution of sympathy which was transmitted by our State Department to the German foreign office. At the instigation of Bismarck, then Chancellor, it was returned. Bismarck refused to transmit to the Reichstag this American homage to his dead adversary, and sent it back to Washington.

In a self-portrait appearnig in the current "Hearst's International," Ludwig delineates himself much as he would any other character in the annals of history. In the course of his self-revelation he says:

"My father's name was known far beyond the borders of Germany. Contemporaneous ophthalmology saw in him one of its foremost representatives. But he was more than a great medical man.

"During long decades he battled with city and state to force a fossilized bureaucracy into reforming the methods of school construction, of instruction, of lighting, of personal care. In this manner he became to the young people a real father, and the children and students of Breslau loved him as heartily as the grim and gray-bearded government officials, city councillors, and school directors wished the disturber to the devil.

"Years after all his demands in regard to ocular hygiene had been accepted in America and France, official Prussia continued to declare them impossible of fulfilment. To-day they have become established throughout the whole world.

"Knowing, as he did, that in Germany the state puts obstacles in the way of every Jew, and not knowing that his son would never have any need of the state, he used the favour of a high government official whom he had cured to obtain for his children a legal change from his own name, Hermann Cohn, although this belonged to one of the oldest nobilities in the world.

"Legally I have always borne the name of Ludwig in spite of all efforts on the part of my political antagonists to quesion this fact. When people abroad shake their heads at seeing a great nation like Germany unable to rid itself of the deplorable weakness of anti-Semitism, they overlook the real basis of this hatred, which is the close relationship existing between Germans and Jews. But Goethe recognized it.

"It astounded me to watch my father, that generally feared house tyrant, bow his head deeply on receiving older and more renowned men of learning in his home. Thus I became accustomed early to render homage to the achievements of important men. Much was talked about fame in our house, for the rivalry between the learned was great. When I saw Haeckel and Virchow, Schliemann and Helmholtz at our table, I had to keep my mouth shut, of course.

"All the same I could notice how men of such greatness behaved, and I could see that they were human like the rest of us. And when we had a visit from Doctor Schweniger, the personal physician of Prince Bismarck, and he began to talk about the Old Man in the Saxon Forest, then I perceived back of his stories the real Bismarck and I was far more interested in the most minute personal details than in his founding of the German empire.

"During three or four winter months I sally forth annually—to Paris for some good eating; to Rome that I may admire the new imperialistic heroes on the Corso; to Vienna in order to hear the best music in the world; to Berlin in order to fume at its politics. But most of all I prefer the Mediterranean, where the weather is warmest, where you can bathe in the sea in December, and where, in January, in the desert of Assuan, you can let yourself be broiled by the sun while staring in astonishment at the great Nile dam.

"Three quarters of the year I spend in Moscia, trying according to my best ability to avoid the habits of the great men with whom I associate far too much. Even when I am dealing with some great soldier I make no battle plans early in the morning, but dig in my garden and take cold baths, which Napoleon neglected, or he might not have lost the battle of Waterloo. Then I am kept by a gigantic mail from eating breakfast. For the mail can only be brought in once a day.

"The mail-carrier is not permitted to bring it. Instead the gardener acts as carrier, milkman and baker. Then every piece of toast prepared for me by my wife grows cold, the American mail alone being large enough to spoil an entire breakfast.

"Perhaps I may find new characters in the yet unknown America, I am to visit. I don't know whether I shall go there, however, for I have read in an old book that no wine is to be had in that remarkable country. And I have just formed the intention of writing an enthusiastic biography of old Father Noah."

A new system for distributing sacramental wines was put into effect January 1 in New York City and, if successful, will be extended throughout the country. Rabbis hereafter will give their congregations written authorization for wine and record each distribution on stubs. The stubs will be sent to prohibition administration for checking against delivery by wine dealers. Revision of the system was determined after a conference between prohibition officials and a committee from the Union of Orthodox Rabbis.

Rabbi Isserman's editorial in the REVIEW on corporal punishment in the public schools is bound to have the commendation of all enlightened persons. What is just as important as to the possibility of results is that many wrong-thinking, unenlightened citizens agree with him. It is true that there is an ever-increasing number of parents who are shocked at the thought of corporal punishment in the schools and disapprove of it in the home, too, at least on the whole. There are many times more who don't like the idea of a teacher administering corporal punishment, preferring to perform the rite themselves. For example, the man who will slap his boy's face and otherwise humiliate him, even before strangers, will not infrequently "just dare" a teacher to touch his youngster. He may lose his temper and kick his child, but no one else is going to, by thunder. A mother will admit freely in the hearing of her daughter that "I beat her and beat her but it doesn't do any good," but if any one is going to beat and beat her daughter and not do the child any good it is going to be she, the mother herself, who has the pleasure. This wrong attitude should not be neglected by agitators against corporal punishment as a help in doing away with it, the end justifying the means. Enlightened parents may have a number of reasons why they do not want their children taught in sight of the strap. The others may have just one reason, but they do not need to be reeducated to be reached. The point is to exclude corporal punishment from the educational scheme in Toronto. The time should be as ripe now as ever for such a good deed.

Rabbi Isaac Landman, editor of the American Hebrew and quondam rabbi of Temple Emanu-El, Montreal, said in a recent editorial:

"The school question in the Province of Quebec, long a matter of dispute between the Jewish community and the leaders of the Protestant School Board, particularly in Montreal, is now before the judicial committee of the Privy Council in London for final decision. Unlike some of its neighbours across the channel, England is a civilized country and adjusts its Jewish affairs in a civilized manner. The crux of contention and inquiry is this: What is the place of Jews in the Quebec school system? Since they are not Catholics, are they to be classified with Protestants in the dual denominational scheme of education existing in that Province? If not, are they to organize and maintain, of necessity, their own parochial school units? The Supreme Court of Canada had decided in favour of the Quebec Court of Appeals which had ruled that persons of the Jewish faith could not be appointed to the Board of Protestant School Commissioners, that the board was not obliged to appoint Jewish teachers in its schools and that the Quebec Provincial Legislature was powerless to amend the situation. Unquestionably Jewish parents and children are objects of discrimination because they are not in any way represented on existing boards. We trust that, in accord with English principles of fair play, an equitable solution for this embarrassing problem may be found. The New York public school system, educating as it does more than 1,000,000 children of all faiths and racial origins, is an admirable model."

Another question might be asked with regard to the school question in the Province of Quebec: Why is it that every one is always worried about the place of the Jews in the school system and no one is ever heard on the subject of what the children are taught and how?

The Jewish People's Schools of Montreal opened February 1 a first year class in which the programme of the first year public school course will be combined with the first year course of the Jewish People's Schools. The Jewish People's Schools are planning eventually to combine the first four years of the public school education with that of the Jewish schools. As a beginning the schools are opening a class of the first year in School No. 2, 5201 Waverley, corner Fairmount. A public school teacher will instruct the children according to the curriculum of the Montreal Protestant School Board and a shule teacher will look after the folk-shule part of the programme. In telling the REVIEW of the new arrangement, the principal, S. Wiseman, says in part: "The child will get his entire education in one place. He will not be tired out through attending two different schools. He will not spend the whole of his day indoors but will have sufficient spare time for recreation and out-of-door play. The child will get his Jewish education in normal hours and not at a time when he is both physically and mentally fatigued."

This news will be most gratifying to people who feel that parents have no right to send their children to school all day long, no matter what it is that the children are sent to learn. The fact that it is Hebrew or Jewish history doesn't make the hours any shorter nor the tax on the child's strength and patience any lighter. The plan of the Jewish People's Schools to include recreation and out-door play as something worth considering is heartening. The world moves slowly but it does move, apparently.

Statement of Rabbi Isserman to the Management Committee of the Board of Education with Reference to Corporal Punishment

It is my privilege to be one of the spokesmen this afternoon for a group of men who feel that there should be some revision, if not total abolition, of the regulations of the Board of Education regarding corporal punishment in the public schools of Toronto. All those who have come here with me have had considerable experience in the handling of children, particularly of boys. Some are professionally engaged in boys' work. Others as laymen have yet volunteered their efforts and energies to help develop the character and standards of the present and future citizens of Toronto and of Canada. We do not come to you as swivel-chair theorists or as kindly visionaries. We speak from many years of experience. We speak from love for the boys and girls with whom we have worked and to whom some of us have dedicated our lives.

We have learned that the proper method of approach to children is through patience, sympathy and fellowship and not through fear and the threat of bodily harm. We believe in discipline but feel that lasting discipline can only be achieved by the positive approach of kindness. All of the men here have been successful in their work with children. Some of them are known from coast to coast. Their success is due to the fact that they have made discipline a joy and not a burden—that they have had the patience to win the confidence of the boys with whom they have worked, and they have at no times surrendered their faith in them. These men have achieved these successes because the use of the strap has been anathema to them. Their boys love them. They do not fear them.

What we have learned from experience the pioneers in the field of education have been advocating for many years. In 1898, Felix Adler, one of the greatest intellects of the age, whose ethical culture societies have spread all over the world, wrote an article against the use of corporal punishment, which has become a classic. The school he established, in which his theories were practiced, has become a model school, which has interested and attracted the educational world. John B. Watson, the great psychologist, in his book, "Behaviorism", stated that "there is no excuse for whipping or beating." Mrs. Sidonie Gruenberg, Director of the Child Study Association, who on numerous occasions has been a guest in our city to advise us on educational matters, has stated in one of her many books, "that corporal punishment is in most cases not only unnecessary but positively harmful." Dr. Smiley Blanton, a great authority on child training, has pointed out that "the rod was the universal method of discipline. Certainly, if whipping could produce good children, we should have a perfect race. No experiment has been more widely and persistently tried than that of attempting to train children by beating them." To these authorities may I add the words of Professor Artman, General Secretary of the Religious Education Association, of which Sir Robert Falconer is president: "Corporal punishment is regarded by educators as a definite hardening process which never develops the moral vision or purpose of the recipient. It seems to harden both the giver and the receiver. This is the developing conclusion of scientific students of education."

The regulations providing for corporal punishment in the schools of Toronto were enacted we understand many years ago. Since their enactment, there has been progress in the world of education. New methods have been adopted. Old forms have been discarded. The field of education has been revolutionized. Who will say that every phase of education must yield to the law of change but that of discipline? Since these laws have been written, juvenile courts with their humane treatment of children have been called into being and the training of children has been radically altered. Education to-day does not aim as it did in the past to fit children into pre-conceived molds. It aims to enhance and enrich the child's personality. Would it not, therefore, be the part of wisdom if this board of education were to re-examine its discipline regulations to see if in the light of educational progress, they need not be revised.

But even the existing regulations are being violated and abused if the information reaching me from various individuals and from 170 questionnaires submitted to children of thirty-five schools is correct. Children are being strapped in the absence of witnesses, frequently during school hours in the cloakroom so that the more sensitive children are shocked while the strapping goes on. In most schools girls are strapped as well as boys and one inspector defended this by saying that this was an age of equality of women. True it is an age of equality—spiritual equality but hardly physical, and corporal punishment is a physical thing. In some schools children are strapped for lateness, for chewing gum, for incorrect spelling—all of them offences if we may call them such, which hardly call forth the most drastic of penalties. The right of the use of the strap in the hands of any but the most experienced teacher is bound to be abused. Some teachers even may satisfy their sadistic emotions through strappings. Inexperienced teachers when they fail to achieve discipline are apt to resort to strappings at the expense of children of the city. Some of the offences for which the strap is used appear trivial and certainly the regulations could not have meant to include them. To these apparent abuses and violations under the existing regulations we would call your attention. And let me add that many enlightened parents who do not use the strap at home keenly resent its use on their children by strangers.

The cry has been raised that even though theoretically corporal punishment may be an evil, it is a necessary evil in the public schools. Is it a necessary evil, and would its abolition mean an end of good discipline in our schools? Emphatically no, is the answer we get from the leaders of Pickering College, where all punishment has been abolished. Emphatically no, is the answer we get from Canada's greatest educator, Dr. James L. Hughes, for forty years superintendent of Toronto's schools, who stated that discipline is as good if not better in schools where there is no corporal punishment. Emphatically no, is the answer we get from Frank L. Cody, superintendent of schools in Detroit who in a recent letter stated: "that no corporal punishment is administered in the public schools of our city. As a matter of fact, this regulation has been in effect for the past nine years. We are much better off without it." Emphatically no, is the answer from John H. Logan, superintendent of schools of Newark, N.J., a cosmopolitan city of 460,000, who said in a letter: "The state law forbids the use of corporal punishment in any public or private school of this city. This has been the law of our state for many years, and I know of no reason why it should be repealed."

The testimony of these educators is significant. They want discipline in their schools and they believe that they are better off without corporal punishment.

Now who will say that Toronto's children are worse than those of these two large cities and that the methods of kindness which have proved effective there could not prove effective here? Who will say that our children are harder and would not respond to love and sympathy? Who will say that Toronto's children need harsher methods of discipline than those of Detroit and Newark?

It is these observations which have brought us here to-day. It is the conviction that the proper approach to children is through love and kindness and not through the strap, and that teachers should be the friends of the school children, that has led us to you. Anything which prevents a teacher from being a comrade with his pupil is bad. We have come to petition you not that any drastic or hasty action be taken in the matter, but that a Committee of the Board of Education be appointed which is (a) to investigate the alleged violations of existing regulations regarding corporal punishment; (b) to consider whether in the light of newer educational knowledge, revision of the existing laws may not be desirable; and (c) to report back to the Board its findings. Should this petition be granted, we stand ready to co-operate with the Board of Education to the fullest extent in such an investigation. We are particularly concerned that you take decisive action, for we feel that the eyes of trustees and parents throughout the province if not the dominion are upon you. If you take a backward step, you may retard the progress of education and character development in smaller communities, who will follow Toronto's lead. If you take a forward step, you will alleviate conditions in other Canadian cities who will emulate your example. You have, we believe, a great opportunity to make a constructive contribution to the life of the province.

We are the friends of the public schools of Toronto—the friends of its teachers, the lovers of its pupils. We entertain dreams of a nobler society—a society which will be ushered in not by the waving of a magic wand, but by the concerted actions of noble human beings. We know that that noble society will be built by our children or our children's children. In them we have utmost faith. We are not concerned unduly about the future. We know that man will rise to ever nobler heights. I am a rabbi and my life is dedicated to the ideals of my faith, which ideals are also yours. Like you, I share the hope that love will prevail on earth—the love taught by the prophets of Israel—the love taught by Jesus of Nazareth. With that love we must fill our children in our public schools so that they and their comrades in all the schools of the world may together build the Kingdom of God, and because the strap is a symbol of hate and fear, we urge you to proceed at once to a full investigation of corporal punishment."

MAIL BOX

Editor,
CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW:

It is a fact that Emma Goldman is "the man behind the gun" in advocating the elimination of corporal punishment in the public schools. Emma Goldman lectured several times on the "New Approach to the Child," both publicly and privately.

Not once did I see her name mentioned in this grave matter. Is it because she is an anarchist? All the more reason why it should be, provided, the meaning of the word is understood in its true colour.

Why not mete out justice and give the devil, even, his due?

Yours in gratitude and for justice,
MRS. R. MANY,
172 Grace St.

LOEW'S

Every Saturday Loew's Theatre has a special children's matinee admission between the hours of 12 and 5 p.m. Next week Loew's will present a feature picture that will appeal to adults and children alike. "Becky," the famous story of a bargain counter slavey who becomes queen of the chorus, will be given its local premiere and Sally O'Neill will be seen as the winsome heroine. This is a sweet story with the department store Cinderella winning a lovely Prince Charming as well as fame on the stage. Owen Moore, seen in a most engaging role, helps to establish the little star; and the whole production is most attractively mounted. Emile Boreo, international stage star and formerly with the Chauve Souris, will top a very exceptional bill and four other clever variety acts will be presented.

Unless a householder can afford to instal a complete laundry equipment, the average modern washing outfit at best gives only "wet wash" results. The only known way to avoid the other parts of the family wash drudgery is to send the whole thing to a good laundry. This one happens to be equipped for specializing on "family wash" only. You have five different kinds of family wash service to choose from at different prices to suit your requirements. Phone to-day and let one of our young ladies explain our system to you.

Expressing regret for the recent anti-Jewish riots in his country, George Cretziano, Rumanian Minister to the United States, in a letter to Dr. William E. Sirovitch, of New York, gives assurance that his Government will not tolerate such occurrences in the future. Dr. Sirovitch, who is a Representative in Congress from the lower east side, sponsored a resolution in the House of Representatives for the abrogation of the treaties between the United States and Rumania because of the anti Semitic outbreaks.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

Rabbi Isserman's Editorial

The Jew would wish no more than that Christians practise the religion of Jesus. Not merely because the Jews' lot would thereby be improved, but because when Christians will be practising the religion of Jesus, they will be practising the prophetic ideals of Judaism, for the ideals of love, humility, fellowship, and peace, which constitute the heart of the Christian message, were borrowed by the early Christians from the treasure-house of Jewish idealism. When Christian teachers, therefore, reject the religion about Jesus for the religion of Jesus, they are re-emphasizing the Jewish message.

To the Jew this exchange of pulpits, the first of its kind in Canadian history, cannot but be significant. It is indicative that the church has abandoned its historic policy of regarding the Jew as a pariah and outcast. It implies that the church has abandoned its belief in the inferiority of Judaism as a faith. When a rabbi is invited to deliver the message from a church pulpit, it means that the church believes it can receive spiritual inspiration from Judaism, just as the synagogue by welcoming a minister attests to the spiritual beauty in Christianity. E. Crossley Hunter is welcome to speak from my pulpit because he speaks God's message.

I hope that this exchange will mean the beginning of the end of prejudices. Ill-will between men is evil. Ill-will between men because of religion, because of God, is blasphemy. That ill-will must go, and I know nothing more expressive of genuine good-will than for a minister to speak in a synagogue and a rabbi in a church at regular religious services.

being an affair of slow, labourious evolution.

The political significance of the situation was similarly misconstrued. The exact definition of the legitimate political implications was never undertaken. One moment Palestine was to be the national homeland of the Jewish people wherein their full prerogatives as a free people were to be given unbridled play. The next moment some petty indignity at the hands of a minor official of "government house" would dash all hopes to the ground. There was never a clearly formulated political programme.

But what of these errors? In a large measure they were inevitable. As time goes on, the realities of the case become apparent to an ever-increasing body of Zionists and Jews. A process of revision of the economic and political principles is constantly going on. The utterances of Dr. Stephen Wise at Cleveland are an indication of the change that is taking place in Zionist thought.

True, it will take longer to achieve the Zionist ideal. It will be necessary to focus more attention on the bases of supplies outside of Palestine. But this will merely be a matter of changing tactics to suit the exigencies of the situation. The experiment will not fail. The Jewish people will eventually win the war—against themselves.

The Bureau of Jewish Education of New York has established a Jewish Home Institute for the purpose of helping mothers who have had no Jewish education or pedagogic training themselves to give regular Jewish instruction to their children. The Bureau has established a correspondence course with a series of magnificently gotten up and splendidly printed booklets under the direction of Dr. S. Benderly, which will be a boon to mothers who are forced to educate their children in Judaism.

WORLD NEWS

Abraham Bricken, immigrant boy from Kiev, Russia, who came to this country at the age of twenty-two with a needle and spool of thread in his pocket, can look down from a handsomely appointed office in one of his New York skyscrapers upon $50,000,000 worth of steel and concrete that have been raised by his initiative. His achievement, the Transportation Building at Barclay Street and Broadway, is the third tallest office building in the world. It was Mr. Bricken who built the first skyscraper in the Borough Hall section of Brooklyn.

Mrs. Israel Zangwill, widow of the famous novelist, has herself launched out into literature. She has just published a novel called "The House." The scene is partly placed in Long Island, N.Y., and deals with a butler's dislike for a famous mansion. Mrs. Zangwill has been writing short stories all her life. She is an effective speaker on woman suffrage and takes keen interest in the Zionist movement.

A new edition of the Protocols of the Elders of Zion has just made its appearance in Shanghai, China, under the editorship of a certain Edgar E. Strother, a former missionary, connected with the Christian Endeavour Union. The resentment of the Jews of Shanghai, as well as of many Christians and Chinese, at this has been very general and found expression in a number of communications to the local press.

George Marx, father of Professor Alexander Marx, of the Jewish Theological Seminary of New York, died at Koenigsberg, at the age of 85. Mr. Marx was actively engaged in Jewish communal affairs in his town and was a prominent citizen.

Julian Feigenheimer, a Jewish architect from Switzerland, was chosen from among 367 applicants to design the palace that is proposed to erect at Geneva as the home of the League of Nations. The palace is estimated to cost about four million dollars. The successful architect is a cousin of Edmund Fleg, the French Jewish writer.

Signor Benito Mussolini, speaking to Roumanian journalists in Rome, is reported to have made a comprehensive survey of the relationship of Fascism to anti-Semitism. "Fascism," the Duce said, "seeks unity; anti-Semitism seeks destruction and separation. Fascist anti-Semitism, or anti-Semitic Fascism, is a gross absurdity. We are much amused in Italy," he continued, "when we hear that the anti-Semites in Germany are seeking to associate Fascism with their anti-Semitism. We also hear from other countries that a Fascism with anti-Semitic colouring is trying to obtain footholds there. We vigorously protest against these attempts to compromise Fascism in this way. Anti-Semitism is a product of barbarism, while Fascism stands on the highest plane of civilization and is diametrically opposed to anti-Semitism. Our aim is to unite all sections of the people under our flag. If we exclude the Jews we shall only be artificially strengthening the camp of our enemy, for it is obvious that those who are not with us are against us."

Rear-Admiral Louis M. Josephthal, commanding the New York Naval Militia, went to Washington to confer with Rear-Admiral W. A. Moffett, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, and other naval officials, regarding extensive 1928 activities of the aviation division of the New York Naval Militia.

Congressman Samuel Dickstein, of New York, has introduced in Congress bills to provide quota exemptions for unmarried children under eighteen, wives of declarants, unmarried children under twenty-one, husgands and parents of American citizens. Also for the admission of immigrant refugees who obtained visas prior to July 1, 1924.

Abraham Krotoshinsky, who will be remembered as the hero of the Lost Battalion during the late unpleasantness with the Kaiser, has been designated by an executive order signed by President Coolidge for a clerical position in the New York Post Office department. This was secured through Congressman LaGuardia to whose notice Krotoshinsky's unemployment was brought.

Mrs. Mollie Kaplan, sixty years old, the grandmother of thirteen children, began four weeks ago the common branch course of the New York Evening Elementary School, completion of which will entitle her to enter any city high school. Mrs. Kaplan came to America from Poland about a year ago, and the first thing she sought was a synagogue, and, after she got settled, a public school. She says she is undecided which she likes best.

Charles Recht, official counsel in America for Soviet Russia, who returned from a visit to Russia a few weeks ago, addressed members of The Group, an organization of liberal thinkers, at the Manhattan Square Hotel. He told the audience of 200 that America, for its own good, should recognise the Soviet Government, as this country would soon be faced with a crisis of over-production which the opening of the Russian Market would relieve. He said that Russian business was now on a cash basis.
